Unique 'scan and share' solution unveiled

Kodak is set to launch a unique, cost-effective and easy-to-use solution that will enable offices across the globe to scan and share documents digitally within any network environment.

Available in May at under € 3,000, the pioneering KODAK Scan Station 100 combines high quality scanning of paper documents with intuitive operation. This enables people to share them via email, save them to a network folder, send them to a network printer or copier or store them on a portable USB drive. All from one easy to install 'one touch operation' device that needs no dedicated computer or additional software.

The KODAK Scan Station 100 targets a wide range of large, small and medium-sized organisations or paper-intensive businesses including insurance, healthcare, financial, accounting and legal companies.

Said Hauke Fast, Product Marketing Manager, Document Imaging, Kodak: "The new Scan Station 100 is unique in the marketplace. It's an exceptional multi-purpose scanning device that represents the latest evolution of Kodak's document imaging innovation on the desktop.

Many copier-based multi-functional peripherals can prove a real challenge to the average user but this new scan station can improve office productivity by keeping a straightforward office function truly simple."

He added: "No training is required for the Scan Station 100 - and the touch screen and innovative built-in technology enables users to scan paper documents quickly and share them electronically with their colleagues."

"The device simply connects to existing network infrastructure and features intuitive and interactive operation, including image preview of scanned images prior to sharing - from the touch screen. And colour, black and white or greyscale documents can be easily converted to JPEG, TIFF, PDF and searchable PDF formats."

"The new Scan Station 100 is unique in the marketplace".

KODAK Scan Station 100

Across the hall. Across the country. Across the world. In just moments, share documents across your office network.

The Scan Station 100 is geared to work with existing networked printers with lower per-page costs and features a 10/100 Base-T Ethernet connection.

The device can scan a wide variety of paper documents up to DIN A4 in length – as well as smaller and thicker items like driving licences and plastic cards.

Mark Nicholson of InfoSource, a leading industry analyst firm, told iNSiGHT: "To be successful in today's competitive business environment scanners need to deliver walk-up simplicity whilst offering enhanced document communications.

And with the launch of the Scan Station 100, Kodak has addressed these requirements directly by introducing a fully featured network scanner offering one-touch operation."

The new KODAK Scan Station 100 ships with dedicated Kodak Help Desk Support and customers can easily extend their twelve months warranty to a 36 months on-site service coverage with next business day response, including travel, labour and spare parts.

The new unit will be available from Kodak channel partners from mid-May.
